

How Will AI Affect Our Life?

Artificial Intelligence (AI) benefits human beings with a great deal of convenience, for instance, AI makes it possible for us to borrow books from library automatically. Meanwhile, AI also shows its potential to replace mankind when AlphaGo, an AI programming, defeated Lee Sedol, the World Go champion. Given the victory of AlphaGo, some negative views about AI have been proposed. However, these claims are not tenable and AI does not necessarily bring negative impacts on human beings' progress. The author strongly believes that AI can positively influence our life, and it will have an essential effect on human development.

To start with, AI helps save manual labor and time, which will allow human to spend more time on other more meaningful things, and this will continuously be important for the advancement of our society. For example, Roomba, a robot designed by an American company named IRobot, can clean the floor automatically. The replacement of manpower by Roomba can largely free people from everyday house chores. This enables them to have more leisure time for other things like outdoor activities, so their life would not be filled with repetitions of manual force. Freeing people from manual force is important since people are under overwhelming stress these days, and having time to go hiking, read books, and so on may be good for their body and mind. By contrast, doing repeat housework may cause people, especially housewives' complaints of doing too much housework and having too little time for going outside. Thus AI does positively influence human beings and its existence is essentially necessary.

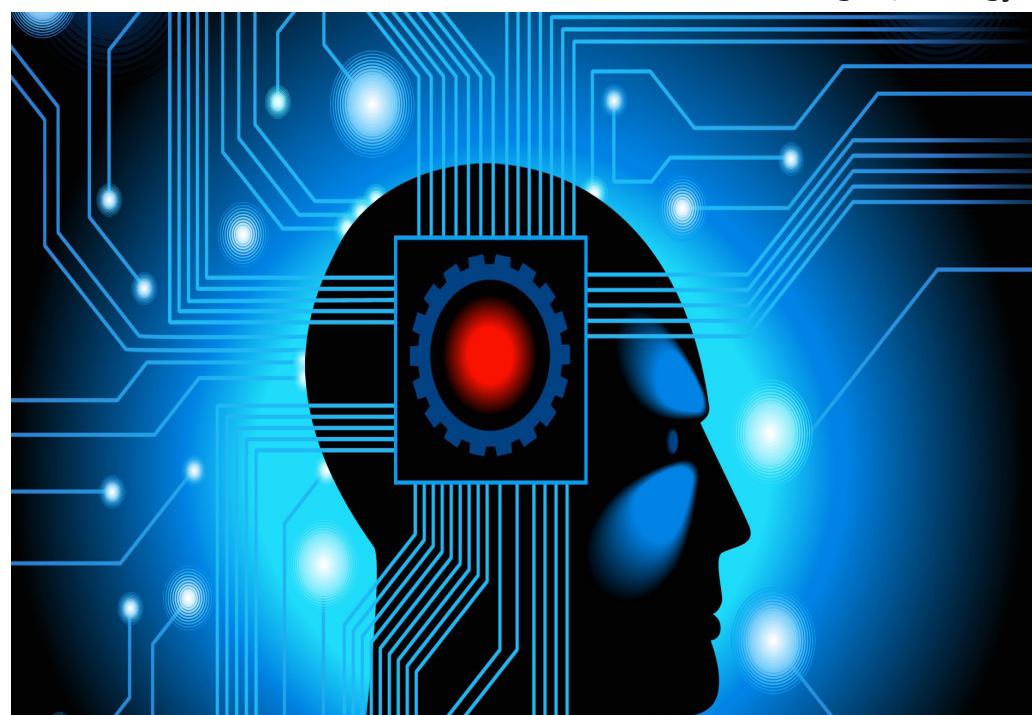

Besides, AI can be designed to communicate with people, which may offer the left-behind children more communication chances. Currently, a large number of farmers leave their children behind and work in cities. The left-behind children have become a social concern because they lack of communication with their parents in daily life and some of those children feel lonely and unhappy.

Fortunately, Alpha, an artificial intelligence machine designed by UBTECH Robotics Corporation in Shenzhen, has the function to communicate with children and help them with their studies. Possibly someday AI would help us solve the dilemmas as the cost for buying such a robot decreases. What's more, with the prevalence of Internet and smart phones, the left-behind children can also make a video call with their parents. Thus AI will shorten the distance between the workers and their family members and offer them a platform for communication.

On the top of that, AI can be used in production lines and become companies' competitive advantage because manufacturing costs will decrease by reducing manpower. In today's international trade, labor force is no longer an advantage, and innovation becomes the key to obtaining profit. Once countries use less manpower in industries, more money can be used to boost technological development. For instance, compared with fifty years ago, China's companies have used more AI products in production lines. This has significantly saved manpower and time, which also allows the companies to invest more money and time for innovation. Nowadays, using AI in manufacturing has become a trend. Without AI the manufacture may not be that efficient. Using AI into production lines does not mean that the employees will lose their jobs, in that the using of AI enables companies to earn extra money and to offer their employees with vocational training, which will in turn improve the employees' ability to develop themselves to keep pace with this highly developing world.

All of this being said, it goes beyond doubt that AI can positively influence human beings' life because it can save manpower and time, help to deal with some social problems, and work effectively to improve companies' competitive advantage. Despite some ungrounded doubts casted on AI, it exists for benefiting human beings. We should believe that human beings have the ability to control the use of AI and to make it continuously play an important part in human beings' life.

Broken Angels

One day, my teacher shared with us a touching story about a group of homosexuals in America who demonstrated on the street with a slogan “Thanks Mom”. What they wanted to express was that homosexuals were born as natural as heterosexuals. I was impressed by the bravery of them and I realized I should have treated those in the minority group much better than I did.

When I was in primary school, my desk mate and I were good friends. One day, she invited me to visit her home. I was so glad to receive the invitation.

When I got there, she and her mother welcomed me cordially. My desk mate told me that her younger brother was sleeping. We were chatting happily when a little boy stumbled toward us yawning. We had a direct eye contact. His eyes seemed pretty blank to me. I was confused and wondered why a kid would have such a pair of dull eyes, which couldn't focus on things even for a second.

When he stood close to me, a weird smile emerged from his face. He wanted to hug me around. But I avoided unconsciously. “Come here, brother!” my desk mate said to him. “This is my younger brother. As you can see, he's mentally retarded.” “I am sorry for my...” “It is OK, but be reassured please, he will not hurt you; he just wants to play with you.” my desk mate's mother said as she came with a plate of fruits on her hand. I didn't want to upset my desk mate and her mother. I didn't want to upset such a nice little boy who showed kindness to me, a stranger, either. So I went to give him a round hug. To my surprise, he didn't refuse my hug because of what I did before, which made me more ashamed. All in all, we three had fun together on that afternoon.

But I knew that I was still afraid of seeing his eyes. I realized that I still could not completely accept a person who was not the same as most people. He was actually the first different person in my life by that time.

As the time went by, the memory faded away. But now, I'm confronted with the same situation. I attend a voluntary activity to help with the amentia children. I know it clearly that the original reason I attend this voluntary is that I really want to get rid of my fear of the amentia children, because I think this kind of fear is bad as well as unfair to them. Luckily, I finally found the answer to my fear when I heard the slogan “Thanks, mom”, spoken out people who are different from the majority. That feeling was perfect.

When I got back at my dormitory, I stood in front of the mirror, and smiled to myself like those amentia children smile to me. I always thought that kind of smile was strange, weird and fearful in the past. But now, it looks lovely, bright and pure to me.

Something Unforgivable

Since my birthday was near the Lunar New Year, my father drove us to visit some relatives on my 11th birthday. After we got there, he had fun with them. At lunch, they drank a lot to celebrate the festival. It seemed that my relatives were very hospitable and really good at drinking. Every time I looked at my father, he was either drinking or ready to drink. Before long, his face turned red. For the whole lunchtime, he was sitting by the table, chatting, laughing and drinking.

Surely he got drunk and we had to be driven home by a relative at last. He was totally drunk and sent to a clinic at the moment we arrived home. As the evening approached, he went back home and lay on the bed for a rest. When the sky was dark enough and nothing could be worse even, my mum took out a birthday cake and we sang the birthday song together. Things went so well except the absence of my father. After the celebration, my dad called me in as I passed by his bedroom. I obeyed. The room was dark and clammy. He looked bad, lying there with a weak voice. I tried not to lose my temper to him and walked closer to his bed so that he didn't need to try very hard to make himself clear. He apologized to me, trying to reach my hand with his trembling fingers. I didn't respond to him, just standing there like a sculpture. I realized how guilty he was, but I just couldn't approach him. At that moment I felt his eyes fixing on me through a weak light. The eyes were full of regret. After a few seconds, I said goodnight to him and left without one more word.

Actually I wanted to tell him I was fine but I just couldn't. Until now I still can't forgive him at this point. Sometimes it's not easy to forgive someone, especially the one I care most.

Gongfu Tea

Tea culture is a significant part of Chinese culture. Drinking tea has become a daily habit of Chinese, especially of Chaoshan people. In fact, tea is so popular in Chaoshan area that it has evolved into a unique genre, which is called Gongfu tea.

Gongfu tea is dating from the Song Dynasty. It is widely spread in Chaoshan area and Fujian Province. At the beginning, only rich people and officers had access to tea, because it was quite expensive back then. At that time, drinking tea was only a small number of people's activity. Later, as northern people migrated to the south during Song Dynasty, they also brought the culture of the north to the south. Meanwhile, the ancestors of Chinese made enormous progress on the agricultural technology, making tea much cheaper for the public. It was then that tea culture started to be spread in Chaoshan area. Since then, tea culture has been handed down from generation to generation. Nowadays, it seems that Gongfu tea has become a part of Chaoshan people. Where there are Chaoshan people, there is tea. This is why you can see so many people in Southeast Asia drink tea every day. As a large amount of Chaoshan people migrated there during modern times.

Gongfu tea refers to a tea-drinking custom in Chaoshan area, which is more than a kind of tea art. Chaoshan people drink tea when they are chatting during a midday break, when they are wandering around the farm, even when they are holding a feast. Gongfu tea is famous for its delicate wares and complicated procedure of making tea. A complete set of wares for Gongfu tea includes a teapot, teacup, teaboard, water bottle, tea wash, etc. The whole procedure of making tea includes washing the wares, infusing tea, scraping the froth, pouring hot water on the teapot, serving tea, etc. Chaoshan people, compare the procedure of putting the tea leaf into the pot to the Goddess of Mercy entering his palace and serving tea to Guan Yu' touring his city. These interesting similes make Gongfu tea more mysterious and fascinating. It is obvious that we regard tea more than just a kind of drink. We respect Gongfu tea. We treat every procedure of making tea seriously even though they cost us a long time to obtain the faint scent.

For starters, tea sure is beneficial for our health. It helps detoxing and keeping us healthy. Furthermore, Gongfu tea acts as a special bond among Chaoshan people. No matter how far we get, as long as there is a person who is concentrating on his/her teacup and tea, we won't feel lonely. You can just come up to him/her and say "hello" in Chanshan dialect and you'll be treated like a family member.

To Live in the Present Moment

If you have a difficult time finding the meaning of life, maybe it is a signal encouraging you to live in the present moment. In my opinion, the peacefulness of our mind is measured by how much we are able to live in the present moment.

I still remember my Chinese teacher in high school who really thought highly of living in the present moment and which helps me develop my optimistic mind a lot. I was not an Intelligent student in our class, and what's worth, I was the one who would think too much about the future. As for my teacher, she used to teach in the college and she also went through the College Entrance Examination before when she was a high school student. Therefore, when I had the problem of caring about my future, I went to her office and always can get my answer. As you can imagine, she always told me to think of living in the present moment when I had a bee in my head.

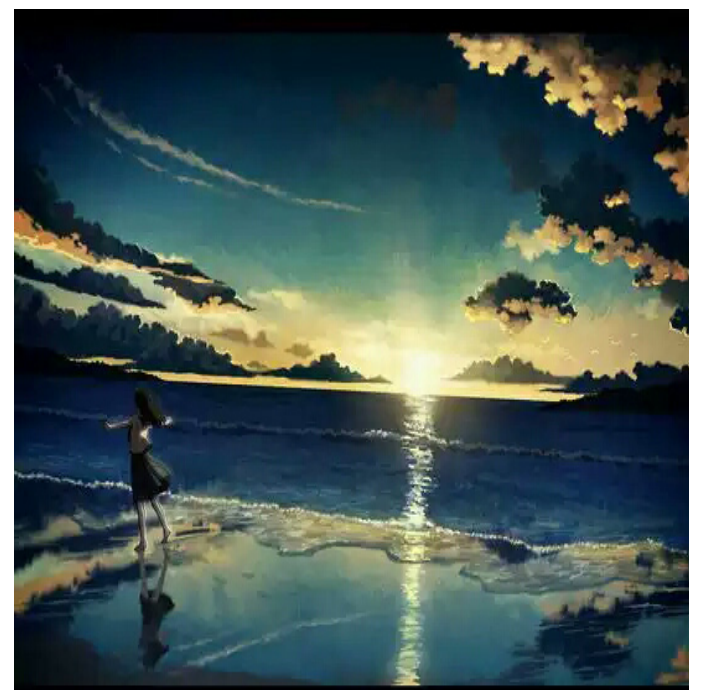

You never need to be too worried about your future, what you need to do is to live in the present and embrace your future step by step. Let go of what happened yesterday or last year, and what may or may not occur to you tomorrow, because the present moment is where you really live in. However, as a matter of fact, I am in a big trouble in thinking my future job just as I worried about my college in my high school. What will I do at this moment after 5 years? Will I find my live goal? Am I satisfied with the society or not? Times flies and it seems I have done nothing that I can be proud of to tell anybody. I am too worried to enjoy my live. And I need to remind myself: living right now!

When we're busy worrying about something, our time for study is passing by, the people we like are moving forward, and our dreams are slipping away. In short, we are drifting from our life if we do not make good use of the present. Now is the only time we have, and we can control. Paying your attention to the present is the only way to save your happiness and success. There is no doubt that living in the present moment is very important.

Just say to yourself: I am living right here and right now. Try it! And your will find the magic power from it.

The Two I Ought to Thank Most

When it comes to the question about to whom we own the most gratitude, parents would be on the top of the list for many people. Yes, I can't deny that we are supposed to send our sincerest gratitude to our parents for their giving us the wonderful lives. Yet for me, I'd like to thank my grandparents most.

As a matter of fact, I was a typical left-behind child since very young age, which means from my childhood, people accompanying me all the time were my grandparents rather than my parents. They did most things for me that should have been done by my parents. Therefore, they are the two I ought to thank most.

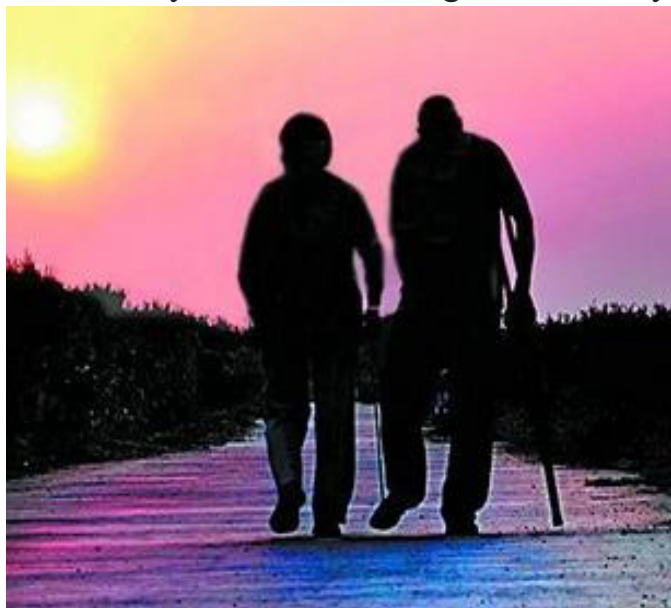

Grandpa, 71 years old, is a thin and short elderly man with a severe stoop. For him, suffering from hypertension and stroke makes it not easy for him to speak as fluently as other people do. What's more, as time goes by, his condition becomes worse and worse. Despite the fact that he is sickish, he has a good temper and is definitely an amiable grandfather.

With regard to grandma, a 65-year-old woman, even though she has a slight stoop, she is still pretty tall among the senior. In addition, unlike grandpa, she seldom has a disease and has a relatively healthy body, which is always admired for those aged people. Because of grandpa's terrible condition, she has to contribute more to the family to make it function well. It's no exaggeration to say that grandma is such a tough woman that she can even support the big family by her own.

Among so much happy time we've gone through together, life in the high school is the most unforgettable. At that time I started to make sense of how much efforts they made to bring me up. Besides, that was the last time period that we three would stay together, as a result of which, we all cherished it very much.

Every time the evening class was over, at the corner of the street would appear a familiar figure. Yes, that was my grandma. No matter how terrible the weather was, I could always see her standing there silently.

When we were walking home with the yellow streetlight, sometimes with the bright moon, a wave of happiness flooded me. Furthermore, in winter, a cup of hot milk tea made by grandpa would be placed on my desk. When summer was coming, all kinds of beverage would be ready for me after class. All in all, with the sincere company of grandpa and grandma, the busy life before college entrance examination could also be a cozy one.

At present, living in the campus of the university, I'm quite far away from them. Surely I have no idea what they are doing now. But I know that it's pretty cold in winter in Hubei province. I wonder whether grandma is wearing a large coat and standing at the corner of the street. I wonder whether grandpa is in a pair of woolen gloves and sitting in front of the desk with a cup of hot milk tea on it. I wonder whether they are missing me in the same way as I am doing now...

My Spring Festival

As is known to all, the Spring Festival is one of the most important vacations in China. To get ready for the Lunar New Year, many people prepare a great deal of food and other stuff before the festival, which kept them busy until the midnight of the New Year's Eve.

Before the Spring Festival, as in previous years, I would help with the house cleaning and do the New Year shopping with my mother. We bought some sweets, nuts and meat.

On New Year's Eve, we are busy with decorating the house with red paper banners, which have auspicious couplets, and worshipping the lords and ancestors. Families chat with each other happily as they enjoy the reunion dinner, after which we watch the Spring Festival Gala. We wouldn't call it a night until we finish the gala and do the countdowns.

On the first day of the Spring Festival, (NEXT → ) relatives and friends visit each other to celebrate the beginning, and they gave red envelopes to the children and elders, which presented a scene of bustle and excitement. I really enjoy the atmosphere since it shows how close-knit we are.

What is more, with the development of technology, there has developed a new way to deliver red envelopes. Some new applications allow people to give and take the lucky money through the Internet. For instance, on Wechat, people could hand out or grab lucky money packets easily, which has prevailed among the young people. Besides, another application AliPay launches an activity of collecting five cards of blessing. You can collect these cards through scanning, exchanging with friends or turning to others for help. With the five cards, people have an opportunity to get lucky money on line. From my point of view, although the way is different from what it was before, it is a good way to have fun on such a big festival. But at the same time, we should refrain from being too addicted to them.

The Spring Festival reminds me that as time goes by, I am not a little kid anymore. I need to consider my future life seriously, to set a goal and fight for it. It also reminds me to cherish the time and people close to me.

May the New Year be a time of laughter and real enjoyment for you.

Mom's Chicken Soup

Mom does not like eating chicken. The reason is simple and strange: because her Chinese zodiac sign is the chicken. Even more strangely, she enjoys cooking chicken for her family though she never tries a bit of it. Because all the family members except her, love eating chicken.

I could not complimented more on my mom's cooking. And I am surprised that how my mom manages to get the amount of spices just right without taking a bite or a sip. "Practice. I have practiced a lot on many other foods" was always her answer. Sounds easy! But how much time does it take?

"Chicken is delicious and nutritious" Mom said. (I didn't know why she knew it tasted good without trying the food) With this faith, she insisted cooking chicken soup every other morning when I was in my school days. Smart slow cooker with a delay start timer could make life easier. But mom did not go for the new idea. She insisted that chicken would go bad if it was placed in the pot for a whole night. So when it was still dark, mom had been busy taking frozen chicken out from the fridge, thawing it in the microwave oven, immersing it into the water in the pot with spices and ingredients and finally, adjusting time and heat control. Finished! Daybreak was near and mom would go to bed again. The second mouse gets the cheese, and we got a hearty breakfast thanks to mom's effort. There was a time when my mom overslept though she had set the alarm. She blamed herself for a whole day although we really did not mind whether we had chicken soup for breakfast. For that time mom had regarded cooking chicken soup as a duty without even knowing it.

As brother and I entered university, we spent less and less time at home. Nevertheless, every time we mentioned to her that we planned to go home, we knew that mom would go and buy the chicken and prepared the chicken soup again.

I do not know what would happen if brother and I do not like chicken anymore. Will my mom be disappointed? Will she suspect that her darling children have changed their taste as soon as they go to big city? Will she feel hurt or pain for it? I will never know these and never will my mom know that I once got sick of chicken. Rather, I appreciated my mom and her efforts to the family. Not only did she cook the most delicious chicken soup, but shouldered all the household chores all her life.

Mom's chicken soup has become a taste and a memory of home. Now when I miss home, I would try to stew chicken soup myself in the dorm. Though it does not taste as good as mom's. But as mom once said, practice. Yes. Practice makes perfect, and that's the secret of success. Everything else would fall into place in the end, and it is just a matter of time. During this long process, hearing and seeing chicken simmering in the pot could already delight a whole day.

The Verandas in Shantou

From my point of view, I am brought up to believe that Shantou verandas (“Qilou” in Chinese) are the most significant characteristics of Shantou, for the reason that although we have many verandas different from city to city, Shantou verandas have developed to their own special style.

The building of verandas in Shantou has a long history, which can date back to 19th century. At that time, Shantou just rose up and served as one of the most important port cities in China. Through this chance, Shantou arouse much attention from South Asia. Shantou is the hometown of numerous overseas Chinese, many of them went back to Shantou to devote money and energy to the construction of Shantou.

Because Shantou is a subtropical city, the weather is a little hot but humid enough to make everything get wet. The most special is that it is rainy in summer, for the reason that there are typhoons frequently. So the verandas were designed to have a lot of functions. For instance, the first floor can not only serve as a place to hold many stores, but also to be a shelter for the passers-by to protect themselves from the rain. The buildings in the Shantou old community, near Xiaogongyuan, are the typical examples of Shantou verandas. In the last century, this area was the busiest and flourishing district, the center of this city.

My mother remembers the wonderful days that when she was a child. The whole family always went for a walk together at night. The children played games like hide-and-seek in the alleys, because the verandas were suitable for them to run and hide. Gone are the days when I was in my childhood. My parents took me to wander in the old community, exploring every corner of it. As time went by, I had learned to appreciate the beauty of the verandas. What's more, some of them are extraordinary because of the antique windows. From my point of view, I think that the verandas are a symbol of Shantou, and that is why the people attach more importance to them than before. As for the locals, verandas record the memory of their life, and they can connect the past and the future just like the bridge. That is to say, they connect several generations. As for the city, verandas view the development of Shantou, the sea-side city.

From what has been mentioned above, I can say that the verandas are the most obvious characteristics of Shantou.

Memories at Mount Fuji

It was the third time I couldn't help myself and went out in the middle of the dinner to see the sunset. The sunset painted the sky. A blaze of colors crowded in the sky, oranges, pearly pinks, vibrant purples, so on and so forth. The sky was so spectacular that I felt like my eyes were enchanted. It was as if the God accidentally overturned his palette. Lake Kawaguchi was kissed by drops of sunlight. I saw from the lake that the whole sky was shining brightly like a diamond. The little hat made by the cloud landed on the top of Mount Fuji, which was on the other side of the lake. Mount Fuji, silently, bathed in the beautiful glow, as if it was a modest recluse.

I couldn't manage to get back to my dinner anymore because every second the color of the sky was changing. Every glance brought a brand new experience. It was lucky that our dinner was the buffet in the hotel. Therefore, we would have enough time to enjoy the sunset.

It was rather cold outside. Along with my friend, I stood quietly next to the road by Lake Kawaguchi. Drops of golden sunlight danced on the road. Passers-by stopped occasionally to take pictures. Down to the end of the road was the brightest spot of the sky. It was like light and gold in the sky mixing together and sank in the horizon line. With millions of thoughts in my head, I gazed into the vast sky, where clouds started to be reddened and in flames. Lake Kawaguchi hid its splendor, turning into a crimson diamond, elegantly lying by Mount Fuji. At that impressive moment, I almost forgot everything, forgetting the fact that the moment I finished my trip to Japan, I would go to Shantou University right away, leaving behind the life I knew before. Mount Fuji took off its hat and became misty. Slowly, indigo took over the sky. The last drop of splendid sunlight sparkled on the skyline. The garish light of day disappeared. The sky turned to a dusky purple littered with tiny silver stars. Darkness began to fall. More and more tiny stars showed up, jewelizing the sky. Eventually we went back and finished our dinner.

"Do not go gentle into that good night." It was a poem sorrowing for the fleeting time and it kept haunting my mind at that time. I chose to go to Japan with a close friend as my graduate trip. The trip was set at the end of August. That's the reason why after I came back to China, I had to go to Shantou University immediately, replacing all the things I was familiar with. The thoughts scared me for a long time. But I guess sorrowing for abandoning the garish light of day will only make one miss out the starry night. Now I embrace my new life, which is far more awesome than I expect. And I think, future looks good.

A Delicious Chaoshan Delicacy: Hongtaoguo (红桃粿)

As one of Chinese historical areas located in southeastern Guangdong Province of China, Chaoshan area is not only blessed with its cultural legacies, but also with numerous local delicacies. One of them called Hongtaoguo is of great significance to the local people.

Actually, Hongtaoguo is not a household staple food in Chaoshan families, but a common sacrifice offered to the ancestors in important traditional Chinese festivals and on many celebration occasions. It is named after Hongtaoguo according to its shape and color, as it looks like a peach in red color that symbolizes good luck and happiness.

Most of the housewives in Chaoshan area know how to make it and my mom is no exception. Although the process of making can be quite dull, my mom usually spends long hours making it with great patience.

There are six key steps in making Hongtaoguo. Firstly, it is necessary to make adequate preparations. In other words, people should select all the necessary ingredients, including mushrooms, sausages, peanut, flour and sticky rice. The next step is to pour enough water into the flour to make the shell of Hongtaoguo. What calls for special attention is that the shell cannot be too thick, otherwise it would spoil its taste. Apparently, a small amount of chemical substance should be used to redden the shell. Then, it is time to mix and stir-fry the ingredients. When all the ingredients are ready, people can start to make the Hongtaoguo, which is the similar process of making dumplings. That is, to put the ingredients in the shell and wrap them up. In addition to that, it needs to be placed into a plastic peach-shape mold. Lastly, We just need to steam it for about 15 minutes and it's ready to serve.

It is no exaggeration to say that Hongtaoguo has become an indispensable part in Chaoshan people's lives as well as part of our memories. I do wish that the local food would help people gain the insights of the traditional local culture.

Solitude

Craving for companion has been written in our genes, a fortune passed on from our ancestors, to combat natural disasters, beasts and other threats endangering our survival. Today, companion has more meanings than ever. It's just like an entrenching circle, first from parents, later friends, and then lovers and so on. Companion is very important in our life, so as solitude, which has always been neglected by most people.

Solitude is a state of being alone but not feeling lonely. In other words, you are doing things with yourself, but you know, whenever you need it, you can always find someone to be your companion. Therefore, solitude is compatible with companion. Yet solitude boasts some exclusive advantages, including knowing yourself and building long-term and healthy relationships.

The most extraordinary advantage of solitude is that it allows you to know yourself better thereby listening to the voice from your hearts. The world is noisy, stuffed full with chores of opinions. Some are supportive and some are objective, or, possibly, between the two. But does those voices really matter in your life? Probably not, especially when you are making some crucial decisions for yourself. No one should know you better than yourself do. Therefore, you need to pull away from the crowd for a while, shutting down your phones and finding a quiet place, talk to yourself and make the decision. If you stick with people all the time, you cannot find a space to reflect, to consider, and to clarify your mind.

Another outstanding advantage of solitude is building long-term and healthy relationship. We need to make one thing to be clear, that is, companion is not equal to interpersonal communication. The former requires input of love, kindness and generosity, yet the latter can come and go just like wind. Moreover, the latter takes a great deal of time, which can be evenly split by companion and solitude. Only when you are solitude, you will know by your hearts clearly that who is the one you think is reliable and deserves your friendship or love. If you don't push yourself out of the crowd and ponder deeply, you will easily lose directions of your feelings due to the distraction of illusions awash in our lives. When you dig out whom you like, you can wisely use your time saved from unnecessarily interpersonal communication to develop prospective long-term friendship and the like.

Another thing needed to make clear is that solitude is not loneliness. Solitude is the interval between companion, or the reverse. But loneliness is abnormal because you receive no positive emotions from the process. Solitude is a way to relax, while loneliness expresses sorrow and misery. Solitude is good for our mind and relationships, while loneliness is right on the opposite.

Solitude is a good thing, thereby, there's no need to feel sad to be alone. Embracing solitude is to enjoy another facet of your life.
